Mental: Elderly Abuse is more than just a film; it's a vital tool for sparking dialogue and change. The documentary aims to:

- Raise Awareness: Illuminate the prevalence and insidious nature of elder abuse, particularly when it involves financial exploitation.
- Educate Audiences: Highlight the warning signs of cognitive decline, such as dementia and Alzheimer's, and how these conditions can make an individual susceptible to manipulation.
- Empower Families: Provide a clear example of the legal and ethical battles families face, encouraging them to establish clear lines of communication and protection for their aging loved ones.
- Advocate for Reform: Call for stronger regulations and ethical standards within professions that interact with vulnerable populations, such as real estate.

THROUGH INTIMATE FAMILY ACCOUNTS AND COMPELLING LEGAL DOCUMENTS, MENTAL: ELDERLY ABUSE WEAVES A NARRATIVE THAT IS BOTH PERSONAL AND UNIVERSALLY RESONANT. THE FILM CENTERS ON THE STORY OF AN ELDERLY WOMAN WITH A DOCUMENTED HISTORY OF MENTAL HEALTH CHALLENGES WHOSE HOME OF 40 YEARS BECOMES THE TARGET OF A DECEPTIVE SCHEME.

The film explores the intricate connection between aging, mental health, dementia, and Alzheimer's. It exposes how family members and others can prey on individuals at their most vulnerable stages, turning trust into a weapon.

This documentary is a call to action—a stark reminder that the fight against elder abuse requires vigilance, empathy, and unwavering commitment. It honors the resilience of a family seeking justice and serves as a powerful guide for others navigating similar circumstances.
